A scene of terrible confusion and panic ensued as soon as the passengers realized the meaning of the crash. In a wild struggle they rushed for the boats. The first boat that was lowered capsized immediately and all of the oc-cupants were drowned in the whirling waters. The next was struck by an enormous wave and turned over, drowning 20, but the frail craft righted again, and eight, who had been thrown

Some were good swimmers and kept themselves affoat for hours, others floated about for 24 hours on planks. Four soldiers on planks, whom the strong currents carried east of Havana, opposite Moro castle, were saved yesterday morning by a pilot boat going toward Cardenas. They declare that Saturday evening there were many others near them on planks, when morning came all these had disappeared. Some of them probably had became food for sharks.

CHARLES A DANA DEAD. The Editor of The New York Sun Passes

Away at His Long Island Home, New York, Oct. 18.—Charles A. Dana, editor of The New York Sun, died at his home in Glencove, L. I., at 1:20 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Mr. Dana's death had been expected for several hours, and his family and physicians were at his bedside when the end came. His condition had been such for several months that the members of his family had kept themselves in constant readiness to go to his bedside at any moment. ness to go to his bedside at any moment, On Saturday morning he had a relapse, and it was apparent that recovery was impossible. Several times, however, he rallied, but toward night he began to sink. During the night there were feeble rallies, but they did not last long. Sunday morning it was seen that the end was but a few hours off, and his attendants remained almost constantly at his hedside. The end came griefly at his bedside. The end came quietly.

The cause of Mr. Dana's death was cirrhosis of the liver. On June 9 he was at his office apparently strong and healthy. The next day he was taken ill and he never afterward visited New

The house was well filled, not crowded. A little before 8:30 a lady in the audience says she heard a creeping noise which continued for five minutes before the catastrophe. The crowding of these to the door obstructed the passage of people from the parquette, which accounts in a measure for the number of casualties. Nobody expected at that moment any other danger than from the falling plastering. Suddenly and with a great crash the great central truss of the ceiling, 80 feet long and 30 feet wide, came plunging down. The ends of it struck on the two gallery wings and doubled it up in the center, sending it down into the parquette with a great scatterment of joists and timbers. Nothing on the stage was harmed.

The news spread rapidly. There was a rush of patrol wagons and of firemen to the scene. The salvage corps with its wagon was first on the ground, and it was followed by all the police patrol wagons, carrying the injured to the Cincinnati hospital.

The list at the hospital showed two dead, five dangerously, if not fatally, wounded and 25 more or less seriously injured, as follows: THE DEAD.

The truss rested in the parquette very much in the shape of a capital letter V. The wonder is that so few were hurt, and of the few hurt, so

The cause of the accident seems to be easily discovered. Among the first who entered the building after the dome had fallen was President George W. Rapp of the Cincinnati Chapter American Institute of Architects.

"It was not that dome," said he, pointing to the huge heap in the center of the floor, "that caused the trouble. The fault lies with the roof trusses. The house has been built more than 25 years, and the wood has shrunk until the bolts and nails afforded the smallest possible security. One of these trusses had rotted away from its fastenings; it has parted and thrown the two sections down, and they, in their descent, pulled the dome with them. These wood trusses are of pine and they shrink very perceptibly in the course of years. They should be examined every five or six years. Modern structures are put up with steel trusses.
